

This lecture will provide an introduction to current methods and techniques used in Gravitational Wave (GW) searches using data from ground based observatories. We shall focus on (i) the transient signals from coalescing compact binary systems and (ii) the long-lived quasi-periodic signals from rapidly rotating neutron stars. This lecture will describe the very different challenges that one faces in the two cases and how these challenges can be overcome.